The global trade environment has been increasingly uncertain due to de-globalization, protectionism, and regionalization of the global supply chains. These trends have only been hastened by Russia's invasion of Ukraine. In this environment, new issues such as economic security, digital trade, climate change and environment are emerging. These changes have heightened the need for trade cooperation among the EU, Korea and the United States. For this, we need to go beyond traditional trade policies such as FTAs.

Please join KEI, KIEP, the KF-VUB Korea Chair, and GWIKS for a discussion by former senior officials and experts on the policies necessary to address these new trade issues.
